doWork(); } doOtherWork(); and doWork() and doOtherWork() have timeshifting. Which means that the doWork() thread has some delay. This turns out to be really bad for the deadlock. How would I go about preventing that? I only want to execute the code in the loop for a certain time, then I want to call doOtherWork(). Can the task be executed asynchronously? //pseudocode while(true) { doWork(); if (condition) break; doOtherWork(); } A: It is very bad practice to use while loops (when you are not actually testing the counter for some kind of condition) as this can easily cause deadlocks. You should check the number of iterations and break the loop when you are done. int iterations = 0; while(iterations < 1) doOtherWork(); See also: and A: One problem with your solution is that every time you call doWork you are
